Artist Spotlight: Marcia Poling

For over 30 years Marcia Poling and her husband Tom have been volunteering at Bombay Hook NWR and have been very active with the Friends of Bombay Hook (FOBH) in many roles. During that same time, Marcia has shared her unique artwork with us, with detailed wildlife images inspired by Bombay Hook NWR.

Marcia grew up in northern New Castle County, Delaware, near the Pennsylvania line. As a child she enjoyed drawing horses and deer. She would paint images on cloth gift bags and give them as Christmas presents. As she got older Marcia started putting paint on matte colored Christmas ornaments. No formal training, just trial and error and lots of practice. She soon learned how to apply paint to the glass ornaments and other skills like painting a curved line that would look straight. She learned how to maintain subject proportion and scale on a curved surface. She utilized ball colors to complement or highlight specific colors in her subjects or background.

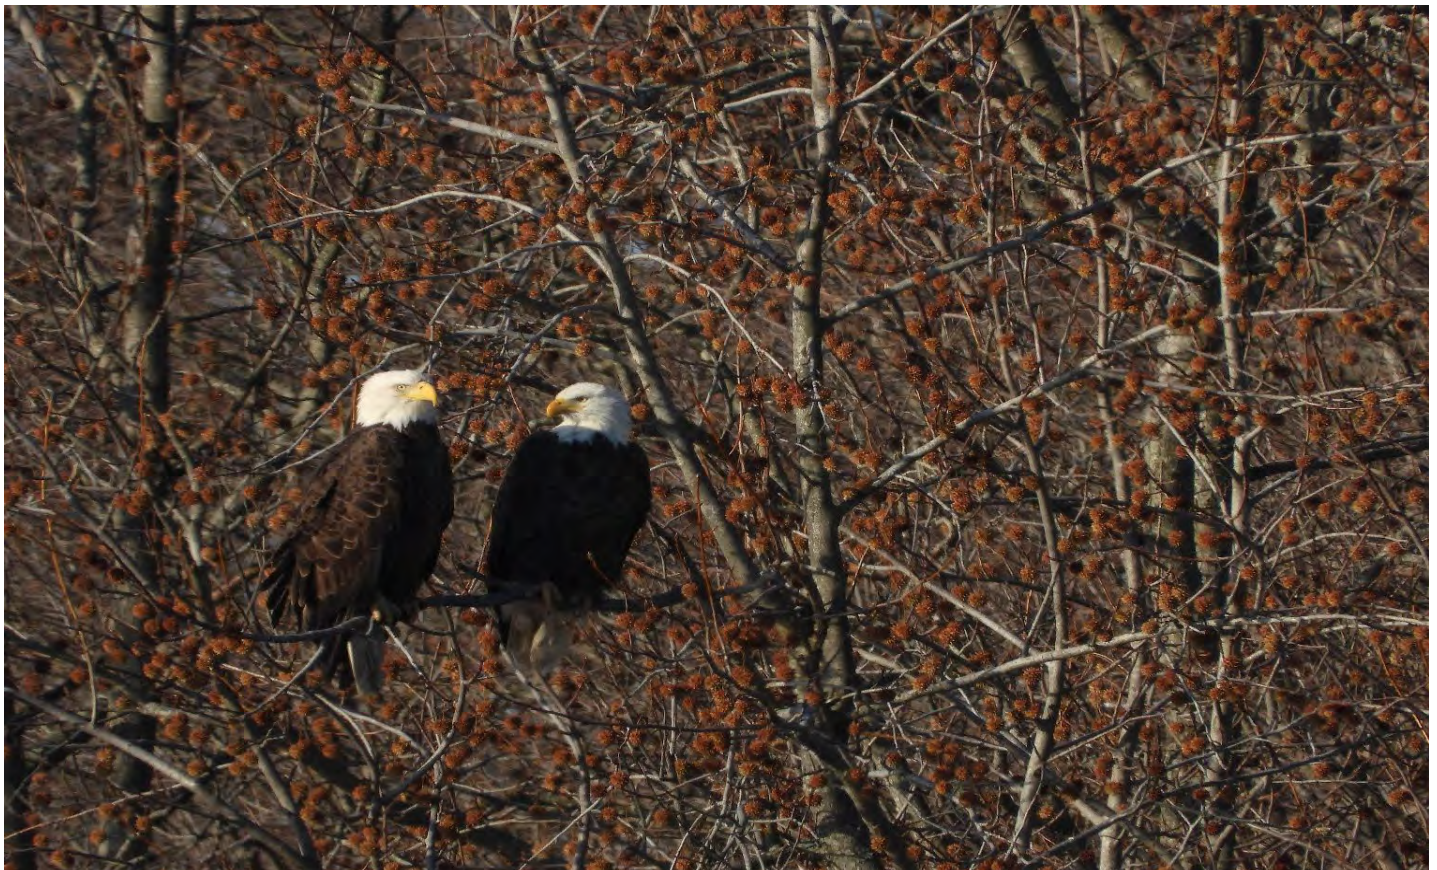

Marcia's father had a great interest in all nature, and she believes that's where her interest in drawing and painting wildlife originated. Her father would take the family on walks in the woods at area parks. Her first of many visits to Bombay Hook NWR was on a family trip in the 1960s. That early interest in wildlife has followed her throughout her life. As an adult, Marcia soon developed her birding skills, allowing her to lead weekly spring migrant walks at Bombay Hook NWR. With her habitat and birding knowledge Marcia could place a bluebird in a spring meadow with blooming black-eyed susans or a wild turkey under white oaks in autumn foliage.

In and around 1996 at Bombay Hook NWR Verna Price was managing the very small FOBH shop at the refuge visitor center called the "Sales Outlet". When Verna saw Marcia's detailed wildlife work on the ornaments, she told her, "I have to have some". This placed Marcia's wildlife artwork as a fixture at Bombay Hook, in the Friends Sales Outlet where we started to admire her detailed wildlife paintings and bring them home. Even today in 2025, you can see and purchase Marcia's ornaments at the much-expanded Blue Heron Gift Shoppe.

Marcia's artistic skills have been recognized beyond Bombay Hook. Several years ago, Marcia was commissioned by the American Bird Conservancy to paint dozens of bird illustrations to highlight specific species of concern and their habitats. She has also painted for fundraisers at Tri-State Bird Rescue and the Brandywine Red Clay Alliance. Her ornaments can be found across the United States in many refuge shops, wildlife art shows, and thousands of homes at Christmas.

Marcia still paints all kinds of birds, mammals, fish and even a Ghost crab. Her more challenging subjects include tiger swallowtails, shorebirds and wolves, and she has even tackled bird species from around the world, antique John Deere tractors and T-rex. She reports Bombay Hook still inspires her artwork. We thank Marcia for sharing a part of her artistic story with us and how Bombay Hook NWR has inspired her.
